

Dear FCC/Ajit Pai,

I'm sick of having to do this every two years, but please stop trying to kill Net Neutrality. You're propping up corporations and killing not only the spirit of the free market on the internet, but the spirit of the internet itself. It's always been international, unrestrained, and user oriented. Trying to restructure it like cable with tiered services, fast lanes, and other restrictive practices is like forcing a round peg into a square hole. I don't believe you're stupid, Mr. Pai, considering your education at Harvard and University of Chicago- you understand Net Neutrality, much more than your geriatric Republican backers in Congress, who likely haven't got a clue as to how to turn a monitor on- so I believe that you're malicious instead. Because only a idiot or an evil man could make such a mind-numbingly moronic decision to destroy the foundation the internet was built on.

I despise you and all that you stand for,
Justin Graffa
